

Experience Watercolor with Spencer Meagher

Saturday & Sunday, March 28-29, 2015

Spencer will take students through a step-by-step process of layering and glazing washes to create luminous effects in a variety of landscape and floral paintings. Participants should anticipate completing three paintings over the course of this two day workshop. First day's morning session will begin with a basic floral painting working from reference photos provided by the instructor. Each aspect of the painting process will be demonstrated by Spencer as students look on. Students will then apply what they have just learned on their own painting. By lunch every student will have created their own beautiful floral painting. Each one unique to the artist. First day afternoon session will focus on landscape painting. Again, working from reference photos with Spencer demonstrating each step of the process. Students will gain understanding of good design, use of values and how to achieve drama in their paintings by harnessing the power of lights and darks. Day 2 students will work from their own photographs. Spencer will spend time with each student helping with design modifications and advising best approaches to develop each painting. The goal is for students to put into practice the fundamentals learned on Day one."
